"New York: Here and Now" is a fresh series of work from Sonya Sklaroff's continuum of paintings of Manhattan urban scenes. This is Sklaroff's third solo exhibition at Jenkins Johnson Gallery. The series is a medley of vibrant colors, rhythmic brush strokes and dynamic compositions that create a window into everyday New York City life. She depicts the diverse Manhattan skyline silhouetted against vast blue, red and yellow skies, arching street lights standing before old brick tenements, fire escapes that climb up to rooftops and the monumental water towers that remind us of New York's industrial history. Her composition relies on receding lines of perspective that allow the viewer to enter into the paintings; it becomes an experience.

Sklaroff's paintings of urban views, are mundane scenes of everyday life, but portray an American beauty that is intrinsic to urban living and the focus of Sklaroff's work. It reminds us of how enchanting

New York City, with its billboards and dirty bustling street corners, an intoxicating beauty and energy transcends.

Her paintings have been exhibited in major museum collections including the: Arnot Museum, Albright Knox Art Gallery, and Flint Institute of Arts. Sklaroff's work is also included in several major corporate and government collections, and has been reviewed by the "New York Times" and "Washington Post."
